Fiona Gailor	5:10		Food Allergy	Eggs	✓
				Cannot eat eggs, or items with eggs, like banana bread. She typically throws up within 10 minutes. Can eat food processed in the same facility as eggs. For Winter Camp week 1, find the bar treat for her that the MBC team prepped for her in team mtg bin, since SBs will get taster on 12/23 and two pieces on 12/24. If she participates in cooking, monitor her closely to make sure she doesn't put hands in eggs or batter and then to her mouth.

Malena Zajdband	6:2	Friends Kaia P	Medication	Albuterol	AsNeeded - Malena has asthma. Usually her symptoms are brought on by a cold. If she has a cold, she'll need 2 puffs of her inhaler at lunch.
			Medical Condition	Asthma	Malena has been hospitalized in the past for asthma, but she hasn't had any significant symptoms in about a year. I would say her asthma is probably mild or moderate, and in the past has only been induced by colds - not sports.

Sessions: February / Sum1Th+F / Sum2 / Sum3

Meyer Valko

5:6 Brother Magnus at Big Leaf; prefer Meyer in a younger group, think will blossom there. If they are close by each other that would be great!

Nico Hu	5:7	We are a very vanilla heterosexual family, but I really appreciate that you are asking this.	Medical Condition	Emotional Needs Nico will unfortunately be joining the group a few days late due to his Michigan school calendar. His first day will be Thursday the 12th. As I mentioned above, he does struggle with new situations and the best thing for him is to connect with an adult he feels safe with and can build trust. He will be away from home staying at his grandmother's house, which is nice but obviously different from being at home.	✓

Camper/YL	Age Notes	Special Needs	Behavioral Info	Details	New
		Medical Condition		Nico is neurodiverse; he is hypersensitive and has a variant of autism called PDA that exhibits as a lot of anxiety and fear around the loss of autonomy or control; and more trouble regulating his body than perhaps a neurotypical child. He can also sometimes struggle to read social cues. But let me be clear at the outset: Nico is has successfully navigated Italian and American preschool, German kindergarten, and he just finished a year of "Young 5s" (Michigan's version of PreK). If you didn't know, you would likely not think he was neurodiverse. He has a lot of social skills and - for better or worse - masks well. He is hilariously funny, loves wordplay and making up songs on his guitar, and is very warm and loving. He checks in on people to see how they are. More than anything, he loves a good conversation; he enjoys engaging with people much more than objects. Making friends brings him a lot of joy, and he has a number of close friends in his public school. But there are a few things that can make a big difference for him. First, we try our best to use "declarative statements" like "It's time for lunch" rather than "You need to eat lunch." Often we simply observe what other kids are doing, "I see everyone is lining up to wash their hands" rather than say "you should wash your hands." Second, it really helps Nico if you explain why you have certain rules in place; he responds much better to a reasoned explanation than to appeals to authority - e.g., "Because we learned that beyond this point kids can get hurt" vs. "Because I'm the adult" or "that's just the rule." Third, like any kid, he vastly prefers having choices and agency over his decisions within a reasonable range." Fourth - and more related to his hypersensitivity: Nico really craves strong physical sensations: making huge messes with shaving cream, pushing and pressing clay, digging, climbing, dragging heavy objects, crab walks, wheelbarrow (e.g., walking on your hands) etc. To the extent there are opportunities to engage in these activities, it can help him regulate. Nico can also benefit from a bit of scaffolding around social situations. He has a hard time with a
